BULLOCH TIMES AND STATESBORO NEWS

Entered as second-class matter March 23, 1905, at the postoffice at Statesboro, Ga., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Nudity And Peace

WITHOUT INTENTION to carry the discussion to a satisfactory conclusion, we take time out to resent the proposal made by a recent nudist convention which offered nakedness as a solution of the problem of war.

To be sure, there are many elements which enter into the important phases of human activity and progress, but off-hand there is in our mind only one element more important than nudism. Let us give it first place. If you will. A man might comfortably cut down on his clothing, and gradually grow accustomed to the blowing of the winds, but don't expect that a man can cut food out entirely.

As to the proposition of the nudists that wars could be ended by the abandonment of clothes—well that sounds sort of off-line. The argument is offered that without clothing, there would be no uniforms, no guns (or at least no place to carry ammunition), and hence no wars.

It is rather remote to thus reason that clothing is any measurable degree responsible for the slaying of one's fellow man. Our Sunday school lesson told us that Adam had no clothes at the outset, and that when he found a fruit-bearing tree and ate an apple he was turned out of the garden which would have remained his home; that his wife donned a fig leaf (which is about the present extent of fashion), and that one of his boys killed his brother, as the first record of human slaying.

We wonder how it can be reasoned that Eve's fig leaf had more to do with the slaying than the apple which she took from the eventful tree? Let's keep our shirts, at least.

His Conscience Hurt

AN UNUSUAL incident was that which came under our knowledge during recent days as we overheard a business man talking in the post-office.

The story he told was so rare that it has been on our mind much since its telling. A letter had been received from a community in another part of the state (it is left for the reader to imagine whether it was city or rural), the intent of which was about to this effect:

"Ten years ago I worked for you, and when I left I took away a shovel which belonged to you. It has been on my mind much, and my conscience tells me I should pay you for the shovel. Please accept the enclosed $3."

The name was given and the place from which it was written, neither of which are matters of concern at this moment; however, the incident is worthy to be considered—what were the circumstances and what the surroundings which induced this restoration? We have sort of visualized an old-time religious meeting somewhere at which something of the personal necessity for upright conduct was stressed. We have sort of wondered if it was a tent meeting, or an assembly in a rural log church, whether it was a high-born preacher which had learned some big words, and who specialized in "arousments" of this kind, or a semi-ignorant fellow who had taken off his plow clothes for the Sabbath and was talking heart-to-heart with men who sat on the long, hard benches.

It may be interesting for our readers to speculate, and if any of them care to know further details, this paper would be willing to supply names by which the matter could be pursued.

Going away back, as is a custom of old people, we were reminded of old man "Red Headed" Sam Jones, who lived in our community two-thirds of a century ago—and skinned for the daily bread for himself and family. One morning at the break of day a neighbor saw his back as he left the door of his smoke-house—with a small package on his shoulder. Investigation revealed that a piece of bacon had been taken from the shelf inside the smoke-house. There was no question where it had gone. The man who missed the meat told the neighbors (but he didn't tell Jones). At a camp-meeting a few days later the

Incidents That Marked Sherman's Great March

(By GUS BERND, Historical Research)

Not all Georgia autumns have been as prosperous, peaceful, and pleasant as that of 1948. When General W. T. Sherman and his ravaging army turned southward from burning Atlanta in mid-November of 1864, they left behind a trail of ruin from Chatsanooga, which they soon extended to the sea. Only two houses were left standing in now modernized Cartersville, Dalton, Ringgold, Rome, Marietta had all suffered greatly—and then Atlanta had been temporarily obliterated. Before the invaders lay a rich path of eastern and middle Georgia country at the peak of the harvest. The luscious harvest would quickly vanish before the foe, for Sherman had planned it that way.

Some of the towns that were spared owed their good fortune to Federal expediency or Confederate ingenuity. Augusta was by-passed because Sherman was in too big a hurry to lay siege. New world-famous Warm Springs escaped destruction because Union scouts dispatched to destroy the buildings then there were outsmarted by a quick-witted Englishman named "Pimphrah," who falsely claimed ownership and thus got the protection of the British flag. The strained relations existing between the British and American governments made even Sherman's soldiers cautious at least for once. Near Clinton, just east of Macon, local patriotism temporarily triumphed to turn the Federal back.

At Milledgeville and in the country the marauders had generally successful nights, pillaged by day and made merry at night. They ransacked the old capital building; built fires with Confederate money; staged a mock legislative session and jokingly voted Georgia back into a union President Lincoln said the novel act and the Radical Congress then at Washington long prevented her from rejoicing. But the damage at Milledgeville was light, and most of the valuable records had either gone to safer parts or were later recovered.

But, incidentally, Mrs. Joseph E. Brant failed to fool the Yankees by covering one wagonload of valuables with garden collars. They got that one.

The record of the disastrous invasion is full of oddities. William Henry Stiles, a prominent diplomat personally of Cartersville and Collins, saved his treasured home furnishings by having them hauled all the way from the northwest city to the coastal city. Along the present highway 41—the Dixie highway—largely followed by Sherman throughout most of its northern section, numerous landmarks and memorials of the Sherman escape may today be seen.

From Atlanta, part of the Federal army went through Jonesboro and McDonough and on via Gordon to Sandersville, where it was joined by the eastern wing which had ranged through Decatur, Covington, Eatonton, Milledgeville, and on to Sandersville. When Sherman's forces approached Milledgeville, the state's government fled with what could be carried, and the old city hall at Macon was made the temporary seat of government from November 18, 1864, until the spring of 1865. It was before the General Assembly there in March of February, 1865, that Governor Brown bitterly denounced President Jefferson Davis as an enemy of the Confederacy and suggested that Georgia declare her individualism to the extent of withdrawing from the Confederacy.

The beautiful little city of Washington, Ga., just east of the main line of march, with its picturesque antebellum estates, including that of fiery Robert Toombs, was spared to soon afterwards become the final meeting of the Confederate government. All along the route of destruction, deeds of heroism took place. Much family treasure was saved here and there by burial; and numerous gardens were dissected by treasure-seeking Union soldiers. The story goes that one wealthy Savannah banker hid his gold in a cistern and later recovered all but one piece. During the occupation of Savannah the Green-Malden House was used as Sherman's headquarters, and other buildings and homes were used to full advantage by the foe. The port city was spared and presented to President Lincoln as a Christmas gift in December, 1864. Despite the sorrow and tragic losses, the war and the Sherman experience inspired an ingenuity and an awakening in the state which Henry Grady, Ben Hill, Brown, Colquitt, and many more were to use to revolutionize the system of life to the antebellum modes to new ways. The "New Departure" it was called, and one may say it literally sprang from Sherman's trails of fire like seed sprouting from a newly sown furrow. Truly much of the old was "Gone With the Wind," and the new is still being assimilated.

Georgia's Confederate records, by Allen D. Candler, tell much about the Sherman period. Letters compiled and bound by the United Daughters of the Confederacy and edited by Mrs. J. E. Hays, state historian, also tell much. These records may be seen at Rhodes Memorial Hall in Atlanta. Held there as property of the state are also pictures and maps of Sherman's operations about Atlanta, including battle scenes where modern structures are now. The maps are from efforts of Federal army engineers and are based on army reports. Georgia has overcome Sherman—and will hardly forget.

MEMBERS POLLED ON VALUE OF COLLEGE

Members of the Statesboro branch of the American Association of University Women participated last week in a nation-wide poll to evaluate college education for women in the light of post-college experience.

"In what way do you feel that your college education is of value in your life today?" is the significant question asked of all AAUW members in a questionnaire which local members are now filling out in response to a request from the AAUW National Education Committee. The AAUW members are also asked, in the light of their subsequent careers as homemakers or business or professional women, to make suggestions for improvements or changes in present day college training for women.

"College education in this country was first planned for men only," writes Dr. Constance Warren, president emerita of Sarah Lawrence College, who is chairman of the AAUW Education Committee. "When I went to college we were still demonstrating that we could learn everything our brothers could learn. We proved it and we were proud of it. I taught women for many years, and later became the head of a woman's college. We tried very hard to plan the work that would be most valuable to our students. But was it? We never knew, nor did anyone else find out from women themselves what any number thought about the value of their college education in the light of their subsequent living."

In view of the efforts now being made to fit education more fully into the needs of society, the AAUW survey seeks first-hand opinions and suggestions from the association's more than 100,000 college-trained women members. This is the largest organized group of women graduates of accredited colleges in this country, and the AAUW survey is expected to yield significant findings in the field of higher education. An analysis of the completed questionnaires will be, the committee believes, of particular interest to those concerned with the guidance of women students and to college administrators who are planning curricula for them.

Home from GSCW for the holiday season are Misses Patsy Hagin, Janie Hodges, Helen Johnson, Catherine Smith, Dorothy Ann Kennedy, Betty Lane, Betty Joyce Allen and Shirley Helmy.
